
The Archive in a Global Age: Reflections on the Future of the Past
Thursday 3 March, 12pm

Joseph Heathcott is a writer, curator, photographer, and professor of urban studies at The New School in New York. Currently he holds the U.S. Fulbright Distinguished Chair for the United Kingdom at the University of the Arts, and is a Senior Visiting Fellow at the London School of Economics. His work considers the role of collective memory and creative expression as everyday civic practices that shape the contemporary metropolis. In this talk he began with some of Franklin's thoughts on intellectual property.
